Team-building Professional Development

Designed by Karen Fitzgerald
1 hour – 1.5 hours, depending on group size

Working from the idea that a city is a metaphor for a team, this workshop is a hands-on project that incorporates printmaking processes with constructing a collaborative mural.

Participants begin by describing what a city consists of. Through charting and dialog, each person equates a part of the city with an aspect of a team. The facilitator prompts participants to think deeper for more abstract aspects of a "good" team such as specific kinds of communication, interpersonal interaction, etc.

The facilitator guides participants through the printmaking process: each person creates a printmaking plate of some aspect of a city. Participants then work together to create a collaborative mural, using the printmaking process, of a city that embodies a team they would wish to be a part of.

© Karen Fitzgerald, 2013